

Walking with Saracens

The name of Ramatuelle is unrelated to any known place name. The two theories previously put forward as to its origin are now contested by historians:

Rahmatu'llah: Meaning "Divine Providence" in Arabic, resulting from the Saracen occupation in the 10th century.

Camatulluci: A Celto-Ligurian tribe lived on the banks of the Gapeau River at the time of the Roman conquest. After being driven away, the tribe initially took refuge in the forests and mountains overlooking the Bay of Saint-Tropez, then founded the so-called "Region of Camatulluci" on the site of the current village of Ramatuelle.

The "R" of region was thought to have replaced the "C" to give "Ramatullucci", then Ramatuelle!

But the mystery remains...

Starting point: Office de Tourisme et de la Culture (Tourist Office) (1), facing Place de l'Ormeau square (2). The tree on the square - originally planted by order of the Duke of Sully to mark the province's pacification and conversion of Henry IV to Catholicism - is also depicted on the town's coat of arms, although the elm was replaced with an olive tree in 1983. Take time to visit Notre-Dame church (3), then head through the porch to your right (4) into the old quarter via Rue du Centre. This street features door and window frames dating back to the early 17th century (the village was entirely rebuilt after the Wars of Religion during the reign of Henry IV), plus a number of picturesque old buildings (5). On place Gabriel Péri square (previously named Place du Château) (6) you will pass a stately home restyled in the 18th century by the Audiberts (Lords of Ramatuelle) and the Cercle du Littoral (local society founded in 1885) (7), before heading down a steep, terraced street (8) harbouring the village's narrowest lane (9). Continue on your right on Rue Emile Depétri and then follow Rue Saint Esprit. Outside the old town centre go down Rue du Clocher whilst contemplating the tall, fortified houses. Walk past the former prisons (10), continue and cast an eye on the Saracen gate (11) on your left. Go up

Rue Victor Léon (from the esplanade admire the panoramic view of the vineyards and Pampelonne Bay) where you will find the restored washhouse (12) and its mural. Continue on Rue Clemenceau to Alfasser Square, where you will see a Memorial erected in 1959 in honour of the French secret services who served the Resistance during WWII (13). The walk continues with the 16th century Saint-Anne chapel (14) and the cemetery (15). Next, turn right towards the Avenue du 8 Mai; the car park offers panoramic views (16) over open vineyards, the Camarat lighthouse and the southern end of the beautiful Bay of Pampelonne. To end your walk, you can enjoy gazing over the village rooftops from the Place de la Mairie (town ball square) (17), before strolling back down to Place de l'Ormeau square and its pretty fountain (18).

Notre-Dame church (3)
The main door is richly decorated with porphyre green 'serpentine' (commonly known as 'serpentine'), extracted from blocks quarried at the Carrade quarry in Cavalaire. The bell tower is the vestige of one of the four watchtowers (attested to in the 14th century) which formed part of the original fortifications. The guardroom has been preserved, as has a part of the covered way which runs over the church roof. The left-hand side of the church corresponds to the wall of the ancient rampart, and contains four arches. Behind strengthened glass, the second arch shelters three traditional Nativity figurines: St Joseph and The Virgin Mary (classified Historic Monuments from the 16th Century) and a Baby Jesus (which was donated by a famous French actor, Jean-Claude Brialy (1933 - 2007) who lived in Ramatuelle. In the third arch, we can see the reliquary bust of St Andrew, who was a patron of the parish. The reliquary busts of St Tropez and St Maxime flank that of St Andrew. The choirstand contains a magnificent classified altarpiece from the 17th century, representing St Andrew. The 19th century mural painted on the vault has been recently restored. Restoration work has revealed the existence of 17th century murals on the supporting walls of the choir vault, which are represented on the right-hand wall. To the right of the entrance, a plaque commemorates the memory of the crews of four submarines: the 'SM 2326', the 'Sybille', the 'Platen machine', the 'Eurydice', which disappeared off Cape Camarat between 1946 and 1970. Open hours : 9h-18h

The Ancient Prison (10)
is situated in the street leading from the steeple and along the ramparts. Built under Napoleon III, the prison's distinctly arabian style gradually led people to believe it was actually a Turkish bath built by the Saracens! Free visit.

The Saracen Gate (11)
The gate has kept its original aspect. From the inside, you can still see the grooves used to slide the portcullis and the hinges installed in 1792 to close the gate with the aid of a double door. On the outside, you will notice stone arms previously used to support the "bartizan" (a watch-turret common in 13th and 14th-century French military architecture). Free visit.

French Secret Services Memorial (13)
Opened May 3, 1959, this unique national monument in France, is the work of Courbrier. It's dedicated to the members of the special services died for France during the Second World War. It carries engraved in the stone the names of the members of the networks of the information service and of against espionage which worked since autumn 1940 in the underground in France occupied to prepare the operations which brought the liberation of the Country. These heroes taken by the services of the occupant died shot, beheaded, tortured or in concentration camps. Free visit.

Sainte-Anne's chapel (14)
Also referred to as the Chapel of Penitents, this is the sole survivor of Ramatuelle's four former chapels. Built in the 16th century and abandoned for many years, it was finally restored in the 1960s. A religious service is celebrated there every July 26, on Sainte-Anne's day. No visits.

Cemetery (15)
The most visited grave is the one of Gérard Philippe, French actor who became famous theater and cinema. Died in 1959 at the age of 37, he is buried in his suit Cid de Cornelle, one of his biggest roles. His grave, covered with ivy and shaded by a laurel, is one of voluntarily more sober. Hours: Winter: 8h - 18h Summer: 8h - 20h

Theater (25)
Built in 1985 for the Festival of theater and varieties, in a frame peaceful and opened towards the plain and the coast, he can welcome 1 200 spectators. Every summer, within the framework of three festivals, at nightfall, artists of international fame come to occur on its scene. We overhang it since the path of La Font d'Avau.

In the miller's footsteps

"Moulin de Paillas" wheat mill
 The "Moulin de Paillas" is one of the highlights of Ramatuelle's rich heritage. Restored to its original condition in 2002, the mill includes a working mechanism made entirely of wood and a millstone for grinding wheat. The "Moulin de Paillas" is located on the road to Gassin at the top of the village of Ramatuelle, overlooking the whole coast from Cavalaire to Saint-Tropez.
